

The Centre for Women's Studies Cotton University announces its forth coming programme in Gender Studies, scheduled to commence from end November- early December 2020. This interdisciplinary program addresses the socially conditioned, gendered behaviour of men and women, drawing upon fields that explore the politics, societies and histories from an intersectional, multicultural women's, North-East perspective. As an Introduction, this programme approaches the study of society through gender, race, nation, class, sexualities and abilities. While the larger concerns of such as programme is to be able to engage in social justice both locally and globally, such a programme combines academic feminism with social activism that creates better citizens with informed awareness of the individual and the community.

This two semesters programme is opened to graduates and/or students already pursuing their masters, professionals or scholars who wish to find a career in academics, journalism, legal services, policy and advocacy, development and in the field of action research.
